

For the new California Smog Check program, a certified mechanic, upper left, makes a thorough visual inspection of the car's emission control system. Then, upper right, he enters data in the tamper-resistant computer analyzer. A probe, lower left, is inserted in the tailpipe to measure emissions. The results, lower right, are printed out and indicate whether the car has passed or failed the inspection.